
The Mystery of the Genre - Hume, Defensio, Politica, and Truef.

In the second half of the thirteenth century, at a time when after Dante we find not much of anything but story-telling and prose, in an age haunted by dread of ghosts, in an age still marked by the black-and-white world of realistic paintings, a new author presented a truly new idea of a novel, of a romance, of the female hero. The first of these new storytellers was, unquestionably, the Italian poet and dramatist, Petrarch, who, after the death of his sweetheart, Laura, caused his grief by writing a. Dedicated to Sen.
